

Wednesday A.M.

Dearest Daddykins

I've been a thinking and I've come to two conclusions. One of them is that it's all very well to put up a bluff and try to think you can get along without having your two onlyest on to your graduation -- but it won't work! And I want you to come. Then my next conclusion is that if you don't come you'll be missing a lot, and you will realize it, and you will be just as unhappy as can be -- you have never even seen Vassar, dad, the place where I've had so many good times, and I want you to meet all the girls, -- there are others just as nice as Ruth whom you are so fond of -- , and all their fathers and mothers and sisters and brothers and aunts and uncles.

What has brought these gradually come to conclusions to a climax is the facts brought to light in my search for a room for Mrs Snow. Everything is engaged and it was by a very lucky accident that I found two rooms at my laundresses. On the hope that you or sis might come I asked her to hold both for me for a week. Now I may be able to get a better room (which Cerene engaged long ago but won't use after all) for Mrs Snow. The two rooms remain for you and May Louise. They are the very last. If I don't let her know next Saturday that you will take them, she will give them to someone else immediately. Now do decide to come. You know you want to, and I want you to, the trip is easy and I know you'd enjoy it immensely after you once got started, and you would see Vassar! Let me know at once, by Saturday night at the very latest.
