

25 February 1936

Dear Nathan,

I received the enclosed invitation. Since you are informed about these personages, you can surely advise me whether I should accept. A talk about such a vague topic as the one suggested would not come into consideration, but rather a popular scientific one, if at all. This matter is in fact quite troublesome for me, owing to the press hubbub accompanying every such step I take. But I don't know of any other way to help those people.

Cordial regards,

Yours,

A. Einstein.
